The camel stands!

The camel does yoga

The camel stretches

The camel does march past

Do you like the camel?

A sculpture of a camel constructed from thick, weathered wooden planks. The camel is standing on a dark, flat surface. The wood has a natural, aged appearance with visible grain and some cracking. The sculpture is composed of several large pieces joined together to form the camel's body, legs, and head. The head is turned slightly to the left. The background is a dark, textured surface, possibly a table or floor. In the upper right corner, a portion of a white object, possibly a piece of paper or a container, is visible.

The camel is curious to know what you're doing

The camel wants to see you

The camel so happy

But the camel has company

The dragon.

The dragon is the guardian of all treasures

The dragon is fear.

The camel hates the dragon.

But the camel finds more value
day by day in its treasure, because of the dragon

The camel and the dragon seldom are at peace

But deep down they both know they need each other.

The understanding remains unsaid

The dragon roars and spits fire and burns painfully

The camel is scared to death

But the camel knows that the treasure is so rare and special that it needs to be guarded at all costs

The camel embraces the dragon with gratitude.

The camel observes.

The dragon observes.

They feel the magnificence of the treasure engulfing the air around them

With sudden clarity they smile a little.

The end
